

Axiall Corporation Statement Regarding the Cemetery Adjacent to its Plaquemine, La. Facility

February 5, 2015

Axiall Corporation's position is the same as its predecessors who acquired the property: the company is intent on being a good steward of the Cemetery. Concerns that Axiall will expand its plant into the Cemetery, build over or upset the graves, or otherwise alter the Cemetery property are completely unfounded. Allegations to the contrary are baseless.

On January 22, 2015, the Court, after considering the parties' briefs and evidence, found that Axiall is in possession of the Cemetery and the corporation plaintiffs created to file suit against the Church does not own the Cemetery.

Regardless of the ultimate outcome of this litigation, Axiall will continue to respect the sanctity of the Cemetery and will not alter the Cemetery in any way.

Background

Over thirty years ago, Georgia-Pacific Corporation, predecessor to Georgia Gulf and Axiall, acquired the property where the Cemetery is located through just title and in good faith. Since that time, Axiall—like its predecessor companies—has possessed the Cemetery and maintained its grounds by cutting the grass, grading the access road, maintaining the interior fencing, performing general maintenance, and protecting the property from trespassers.

Axiall and its predecessors have always provided Church members and the general public with ready access to the Cemetery for burials, visitation, and beautification of the individual gravesites. While security concerns require Axiall to control access to the Cemetery, it does not exercise control over and has no input in decisions concerning burials. These decisions are formally delegated to the Mount Zion Baptist Church #1 of Revilletown.

About Axiall

Axiall Corporation (NYSE: AXLL) is a leading integrated chemicals and building products company. Headquartered in Atlanta, Axiall has manufacturing facilities located throughout North America and in Asia to provide industry-leading materials and services to customers. For more information, visit www.axiall.com.